They drove back up the right side of the road. The young man pulled the car to the curb and killed the ignition. They crossed to the outdoor cafe and it was pleasant to eat by themselves and be conscious of the people that they did not know eating at the other tables. That night the wind rose and in their corner room high up in the big hotel they heard the heavy fall of the surf on the beach. In the dark the young man pulled a light blanket up over the sheet and the girl said, "Aren't you glad we decided to stay?" "I like to hear the surf pound." "So do I." They lay close together and listened to the sea. Her head was on his chest and she moved it against his chin and then moved up in the bed and put her cheek against his and pressed it there. She kissed him and he could feel her hand touching him. "That's good," she said in the darkness. "That's lovely. You're sure you don't want me to change?" "Not now. Now I'm cold. Please hold me~ warm," "I love you when you feel cold against me." "If it gets this cold here at night we'll have to wear pyjama tops. That will be fun for breakfast in bed." "It's the Atlantic ocean," she said. "Listen to it." "We'll have a good time while we're here," he told her. "If you want we'll stay a while. If you want we'll go. There are plenty of places to go." "We might stay. a few days and see." "Good. If we do I'd like to start to write." "That would be wonderful. We'll look around tomorrow. You could work here in the room if I were out couldn't you? Until we found some place?" "Sure." "You know you must never worry about me because I love you and we're us against all the others. Please kiss me," she said. He kissed her. "You know I haven't done anything bad to us. I had to do it. You know that." He did not say anything and listened to the weight of the surf falling on the hard wet sand in the night.
